the peasants kneeling before us at loch ar brugg our country home for in those days although the revolution had passed over france it was still the custom for peasants to kneel before their masters and my mother felt it right and proper that they should do so i was no longer allowed to go in and out of her room as had been my wont and when my father took me in his arms and carried me gently in to see my little sister and bent with me over the small pink cradle so that i might give her a kiss i felt instead a violent wish to bite her about anne douglas sedgwick the author her best selling novel tante was made into a 1919 film the impossible woman and the little french girl into a 1925 film of the same name four of her books were on the list of bestselling novels in the united states for 1912 1924 1927 and 1929 as determined by the new york times this edited book presents the most recent theory research and practice on information and technology literacy as it relates to the education of young children because computers have made it so easy to disseminate information the amount of available information has grown at an exponential rate making it impossible for educators to prepare students for the future without teaching them how to be effective information managers and technology users although much has been written about information literacy and technology literacy in secondary education there is very little published research about these literacies in early childhood education recently the national association for the education of young children and the fred rogers center for early learning and children s media at saint vincent college published a position statement on using technology and interactive media as tools in early childhood programs this statement recommends more research to better understand how young children use and learn with technology and interactive media and also to better understand any short and long term effects many assume that today s young children are digital natives with a great understanding of technology however children may know how to operate digital technology but be unaware of its dangers or its value to extend their abilities this book argues that information and technology literacy include more than just familiarity with the digital environment they include using technology safely and ethically to demonstrate creativity and innovation to communicate and collaborate to conduct research and use information and to think critically solve problems and make decisions grounded in the foucauldian literature on governmentality and drawing on a broad range of disciplines this book examines the government of childhood in the west from the early modern period to the present the book deals with three key time periods and examines shifts in the conceptualization and regulation of childhood and child rearing this text is designed for advanced curriculum methods and issues courses in early childhood education and child and family studies departments as the library these mini books are for people who seek freedom from codependency anger conflict verbal and emotional abuse depression or other problems leonardo da vinci and a memory of his childhood is a 1910 essay by sigmund freud about leonardo da vinci it consists of a psychoanalytic study of leonardo's life based on his paintings how american childhood and parenting have changed from the nation's founding to the present the end of american childhood takes a sweeping look at the history of american childhood and parenting from the nation's founding to the present day renowned historian paula fass shows how since the beginning of the american republic independence self definition and individual success have informed americans attitudes toward children but as parents today hover over every detail of their children's lives are the qualities that once made american childhood special still desired or possible placing the experiences of children and parents against the backdrop of social political and cultural shifts fass challenges americans to reconnect with the beliefs that set the american understanding of childhood apart from the rest of the world fass examines how freer relationships between american children and parents transformed the national culture altered generational relationships among immigrants helped create a new science of child development and promoted a revolution in modern schooling she looks at the childhoods of icons including margaret mead and ulysses s grant who as an eleven year old was in charge of his father's fields and explored his rural Ohio countryside. Fass also features less well-known children like ten-year-old Rose Cohen who worked in the drudgery of nineteenth-century factories bringing readers into the present. Fass argues that current American conditions and policies have made adolescence socially irrelevant and altered children's road to maturity while parental oversight threatens children's competence and initiative showing how American parenting has been firmly linked to historical changes. The end of American childhood considers what implications this might hold for the nation's future. In this book Chris Jenks looks at what the ways in which we construct our image of childhood can tell us about ourselves after a general discussion of the social construction of childhood. The book is structured around three examples of the way the image of the child is played out in society: the history of childhood from medieval times through the enlightenment; discovery of childhood to the present; the mythology and reality of child abuse and society's response to it; the death of childhood in cases such as the James Bulger murder in which the child itself becomes the perpetrator of evil. Part of the highly successful Key Ideas series, this book gives students a concise, provocative insight into some of the controlling concepts of our culture. Leonardo da Vinci and a memory of his childhood is a 1910 essay by Sigmund Freud about Leonardo da Vinci's childhood. It consists of a psychoanalytic study of Leonardo's life based on his paintings. Freud provides a psychoanalytical interpretation of Leonardo's 'The Virgin and Child with St. Anne' according to Oskar Pfister. The Virgin's garment reveals a vulture when viewed sideways. Freud accepted this interpretation in spite of the outlines resembling rather a duck than a vulture as a supportive interpretation of his view of a passive homosexual childhood fantasy. Leonardo wrote about in the Codex Atlanticus here. Leonardo recounts being attacked as an infant in his crib by the tail of a vulture. Extraordinary changes in patterns of family life and family law have dramatically altered the boundaries of parenthood and opened up numerous questions and debates: what is parenthood and why does it matter? How should society define, regulate, and support it? Is parenthood separable from marriage or couplehood when society seeks to foster children's well-being? What is the better model of parenthood from the perspective of child outcomes? Intense disagreements over the definition and future of marriage often rest upon conflicting convictions about parenthood. What is parenthood? Asks bold and direct questions about parenthood in contemporary society and it brings together a stellar interdisciplinary group of scholars with widely varying perspectives to investigate them. Editors Linda C. McClain and Daniel Cere facilitate a dynamic conversation between scholars from several disciplines about competing models of parenthood and a sweeping array of topics including single parenthood, adoption, donor-created families, gay and lesbian parents, transnational parenthood, parent-child attachment and gender difference, and parenthood. Elusive Childhood examines how discourse touched by the identity politics of youth might be revised for fairness. Susan Honeyman demonstrates this potential by reading representations of children from throughout the modern episteme in works of such writers as Henry James, Edith Wharton, and James Baldwin. Identity politics have changed the way we classify literature by opening up the canon but they have also changed the way we approach literature. We've learned to recognize that biology is not destiny, sex doesn't necessarily determine gender or orientation, nor do fictitious absolutes like blood ratios measure ethnocultural identity and so in an effort to avoid false generalizing about others we endorse individual self-representation all the while recognizing how society constructs us but when it comes to representing the position we call childhood there is little opportunity in legitimated discourse for children's self-representation and inadequate attention to social constructedness. Recognizing political inequity in literary representations of children, Honeyman proposes a method of reading child-figuration in relief to impose as little adult prejudice as possible. This might be impossible for adults yet it is necessary to attempt. Book jacket
